

First Trail Work Day Completed

April 24, 2021

Four volunteers came for our first trail work day of the season on the Bell Hill Connector Trail. In the morning, two new volunteers, Jerry Dube and Ed Paquin, who had been reading about the project showed up to work with trail master Larry Gomes. As they were leaving, John Ryan showed up to work the afternoon shift with Larry.

The work being done was cutting trees along the side of a steep hill leading down to the central wetland crossing. It was hard work with the crew needing to stand on the steep side hill while cutting trees and then having to drag the brush to the downhill side of the slope.

A lot of progress was made but there is still more to do. Please consider giving us a few hours of your time to help us complete this critical task. Work on the trail cannot start until the cutting is done.

Our sincere thanks go out to these four volunteers for their help on Saturday. Here is a picture of the hillside at the end of the day:
